A small group of Mexicans is falling in behind the American columns as they move northward, always keeping out of sight, but telling the natives that they are chasing the "gringoes" from Mexican soil. They stop whenever the Americans halt and hide or disarm if General Pershing's men approach them.

The suppositions are prevalent regarding the identity of these men. One is that they are Carranzitas trying to give the American movement the appearance of a retreat. The other is that they are bandits, seeking to annoy the Americans by sniping. The latter conjecture is regarded as the more probable.

This is the first intimation received recently that American soldiers ed recently that American soldiers were stationed so far to the south, All reports have placed their southernmost at Namiquipa, which is a considerable distance, to the north of Temosachio, from which it is also separated by the Sierra Madre range.
